EIGHTY ARISTOCRATIC ENGLISHMEN CHARGED WITH FOUL CRIMES.

LORD ARTHUR SOMERSET AND LORD RONALD GOWER AMONG THE ACCUSED.

They Are Saved from Arrest by the British Home Office and Allowed to Flee to the Continent—Henry Labouchere Exposes Them and Calls for Their Immediate Punishment—A Terrible Scandal.

Special Cable Despatch to the World. LONDON, Nov. 14.—Labouchere, in Truth, this week says: "The law must be equally administered, if not in Ireland at least in England. A short time ago several telegraph boys in the neighborhood of Cavendish Square were found to be spending more money than they earned. An inquiry was made by the postal authorities, and it was ascertained that the boys were supplied with money by a band of 'gentlemen' who met at a house in Cavendish street. Further investigations disclosed what took place at these gatherings of 'gentlemen' of England, but it is of course impossible to enter briefly mention what occurred.

"The revealed facts are in the hands of the Home Office in Scotland. It is not at all of the greatest hereditary names of the country are mixed up in the scandal, every effort is being made to secure immunity for the criminals. Indeed, I am credibly informed that the Home Office is throwing obstacles in the way of prompt action on the part of Scotland Yard, and is trying to get the persons concerned out of the country before the warrants are issued.

"The fall of Louis Philippe was to a great extent due to the Duc de Praslin having murdered his governess, but the Duc's crime compares favorably with that of these titled miscreants. Very possibly our Government of the classes is of the opinion that the revelations which would ensue were the criminals put on trial would deal a blow to the reign of the aristocracy. Let them, however, understand that they will not be allowed to protect their friends. It would really be too monstrous if the crimes which, when committed by poor ignorant men, lead to sentences of penal servitude were to be done with impunity by those whose names are certain for crimes too prevalent to late, by all accounts, that we cannot tolerate among us, unless London is to be regarded as a disgraceful city and held up to the opprobrium of modern civilization.

"I have no sort of sympathy with vigilance associations and other such private censors of the Government, but I am certain that the police and warning high-born criminals to get out of the jurisdiction of British courts in order to save them from prosecution, there is a wide difference.

"This social sensation really overshadows anything England has ever known. Every effort is being made to suppress the facts by the members of the Government, but it is tonight that Police Commissioner Munro threatens to resign. Unless the warrants are allowed to be issued within ten days he will throw up his appointment. He is unable to issue the warrants himself. That should be done by the Home Office, which is keeping them back as long as possible to allow the fellows to get out of the country and as long as possible.

"Lord Salisbury has received a request from Mr. Munro, who asked to be allowed to issue the warrants. Lord Salisbury said he required twenty-four hours to consider the application before he could accede to the wish. In the mean time Lord Salisbury privately gave warning to the accused, who took the hint, packed their trunks and went to the Continent, where they are now. Lord Salisbury says that he would be useless to issue the warrants, as the men wanted had fled the country. Munro was furious at the Home Office for trying his hands and assisting in the escape of the criminals. If Commissioner Munro resigns the whole story must come out, as he will be obliged to tell his reasons for resigning. Mr. Munro says that if he is compelled to go he will publish the truth of the terrible scandal.

"The only three names that it is absolutely safe to mention now are Lord Arthur Somerset, Lord Ronald Gower, and Errol, the equerry of Prince Albert Victor, but the names of more than eighty prominent persons are in the possession of the Home Office. Lord Ronald Gower is the man who presented the Duke of Stratford with the statue of Shakespeare last year. Lord Somerset is the son of the Duke of Beaufort, and is a prominent man on the turf. He resigned from the Guards the other day on account of the exposure, and the public was notified through the court's official gazette that he had resigned. Mr. Somerset's name is the only one which has no further use for his services. Errol was going to accompany Prince Albert Victor on his tour to India, but on joining the party at Brindisi he was notified that his services were not required, as his royal master had been informed that his equerry was concerned in the disgraceful scandal, and Errol was not thought fit to accompany the prince to India. Errol was told that it would be better for him if he remained in Brindisi or even went a little further away from London.

"A prominent Scotland Yard man told The World representative to-day that there was no reluctance on the part of the police to prosecute the fellows, but under existing laws it is practically impossible to secure a conviction. The new law, which was passed as a result of Editor Stead's exposures, provides that the prosecution must secure corroborative evidence in order to secure a conviction. The trouble about this case is that no corroborative evidence can be secured. The men charged with the crimes have consulted all the most prominent solicitors in London, who have assured them on the point.

IT WAS HIS WISH TO HAVE NOTHING DREARY ABOUT THE OBSEQUIES.

He Died as He Had Lived, an Agnostic, and He Had "No Time for Hypocrisy" When the End Came—By His Request the Funeral Service Was an Address by a Sergeant, Who Was His Friend.

"What's that? Three raps! They want an officer. Well, I'm not afraid to go." These were almost the last words spoken by Augustus M. Denyse, whose funeral took place yesterday.

This dying speech by a man who for more than thirteen years had been a patrolman on the New York force, under ordinary circumstances would be accepted as one of those singular yet pathetic incidents which frequently accompany the putting off of mortality, where, in the delirious state immediately preceding dissolution, the final effort of expiring humanity is unconsciously rally to the line of accented duty. But the circumstances accompanying the death of Policeman Denyse were not ordinary, and taken in conjunction with other utterances from his lips a few moments before those lips were kissed into ice by the Angel of Death, seem to indicate that at the instant of his dying speech he was in the full possession of all his mental faculties. Painted as it may appear to many, horrible as it may seem to some of his friends and acquaintances, there can be no disguising the fact that Patrolman Denyse, of the Nineteenth Precinct, died as he had lived, an outspoken agnostic and a disbeliever in revealed religion, and that he met death coming not suddenly, but seen approaching with deliberate long distance, and with a tremor or start of the lips, which was not a sign of fear, but a sign of the calmness with which he met his fate.

THE MYSTERIOUS WOUND PROBABLY INFLECTED WITH A WOMAN'S PARASOL.

The Victim Lived Two Weeks After Receiving It and Passed Through Two Hospitals Without His Injury Being Noticed—A Singular Operation of His Family to Attempt to Clear Up the Mystery.

Martin J. Flynn, twenty-four years of age and a native of Ireland, died at No. 33 St. Mark's place Wednesday evening under extremely suspicious circumstances. Nov. 8 Dr. Henry M. Silver, of No. 8 Third street, was called to attend Flynn, who was complaining of a cold and cough. The physician was informed that the patient had been an irregular habit, and as it seemed to be an ordinary cold, he wrote a prescription, telling Annie, the patient's sister, that if Martin did not improve to send for him again. Tuesday last Dr. Silver was again summoned, finding the young man evidently sinking. Then for the first time he was told that Martin had been assaulted by a woman two weeks before, and that one of her hands had pinched him in the eye with an umbrella or cane.

On further examination the physician discovered that there had been a wound under the left eye, and that Martin had been in a station-house, the New York Hospital and also Bellevue Hospital. As Coroner Mesurier resided in that neighborhood Dr. Silver called on him and requested that Flynn's ante-mortem account be taken. The Coroner proceeded to the house Wednesday evening, but death had already occurred. As the physician expressed the opinion that the umbrella or cane ferrule had lodged in the brain the case passed into the hands of Coroner Hanly, and he proceeded yesterday to make an investigation.

The Coroner found that preparations for the funeral had already been begun. When he announced his errand the elder brother, Matthew C. Flynn, objected to a post-mortem examination, saying that Martin had died of the effects of an attack of pneumonia he had sustained about a year ago. He ridiculed the idea that the wound on the eye had anything to do with it. Annie Flynn, a sister, about eighteen years of age, was then questioned. She said that the day before the last election she received a letter from Martin saying he was in Bellevue Hospital, and requesting her to call. On her doing so she found him very weak, and he told her that on the last Monday in October he had met three men in Broadway, near Third street, and they began bothering him. A brief quarrel ensued, and one of the men jabbed an umbrella into his eye. He did not know the man, nor did he explain how he came to be in that neighborhood.

WHY OUR SOLDIERS DESERT. Acting Judge Advocate-General Lieber's Report on the Reasons Alleged. WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The Acting Judge Advocate-General of the Army, Col. Guido N. Lieber, has submitted an exhaustive report of the operations of his office during the year 1888. They are as follows:

150 WEST POINT CADETS ILL. Mysterious Outbreak of Sickness at the Military Academy. WEST POINT, N. Y., Nov. 14.—A rumor reached here to-day that one-half the corps of cadets at West Point had been poisoned. An investigation revealed the fact that about 150 cadets reported at the hospital on Tuesday morning with symptoms of cholera, and were, of course, relieved from military duty. There were no symptoms of poisoning, and all are now back at their studies again, although the post surgeon was kept very busy for a time. The waiters and attendants at the mess hall, and even the gardener and the drivers of the teams, were ill. It is thought that the water used by the corps had been contaminated by bacteria, as some of those attacked had eaten nothing at the mess. Nothing as to the cause, however, is as yet positively known.

Drugging Statues Through the Streets. WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—A letter received here from Caracas, dated Nov. 5, says that on Oct. 28 the statues of Guzman Blanco, in that city, were pulled down and dragged through the streets until broken pieces. Similar statues in other cities met a like fate.

The President retained a few days' uninterrupted recreation, and he is expected to return to Washington Saturday.

SHE CARRIES BUT ONE GOWN. The Leader of a Host of Imitators Was in Good Spirits as the Augusta Victoria Sailed Down the Bay—Already Another Globe-Trotter Has Started Westward and May Meet Miss Bly's Coming Home—Travelers Here and in Other Big Cities Are Intensely Interested in the Trip—Dr. Chauncey Depece Says that It May Give a Social Revolution in the East—"Jules Verne's Pace Is Too Slow for 'The World,'" Says a Thoughtful Westerner.

Miss Bly, when this page reaches its readers, will be far out at sea, just about a day on her way round the globe. If a good beginning is half the struggle, then the intrepid, petticoated traveler has nothing to complain of. A finer opportunity for a start on a sea trip could not have been chosen, and the first of November air freshened her spirits, and she stood bravely in the center of a group of admiring and rather envious gentlemen and chatted first with one, then another, and then all together. There was not a wince of fear or trepidation, and no youngster just let loose from school could have been more merry and light-hearted.

She was bright and sociable, and she had having taken an affectionate farewell of her mother after a hearty breakfast. Then grasping that net over-bulky gipsack, all in its bright, clean novelty, she took a democratic horsecar down to Christopher street ferry, took her chances of getting across the river by that uncertain route, lay locked in the New York berth with a great, long white Star steamer rested across the river, and she was in the midst of a great rumbling mass of coal barges had lazily crawled by the Hoboken slip to the Lackawanna docks besides, and finally found herself within the broad domain set apart to the uses of the Hamburg-American Company. She was quickly under the escort of General Passenger Agents O. L. Richardson and Emil L. Boas, who said her parting attention. Commander Albers was presented to the pretty passenger and assured her that he would do all he could to see that the initial part of her complex voyage by sea and land was a complete success.

The popular commander felt certain that he would be able to put her ashore in Southampton Thursday morning, and that she would take a quiet night's sleep in a hotel and be up in time for any one of a dozen trains which would run her up to Lunen over the two-hours' schedule of running time between the Channel seaport and the city on the Thames.

"I won't take any sleep until I am in London and made sure of my place in that bakers' shop at Victoria Station on Friday night," said the globe-trotter, and she smiled approval from the captain of the big Augusta Victoria.

THE TRAVELLING DRESS. "What do you think of my dress?" was the first query put by Miss Bly when she met her fellow copy-grinder on The World. He looked at it and found it a sort of picturesque garment, and he said that it was very nice for the upper quarter of the left chest, and another lonely trio of big buttons down on the left side of the waist band. There was a close-fitting slab of plaid cloth down the front of the upper section of the garment and then the skirt end was plain blue cloth with a sort of festoon tail of plaid cloth across on the nether end. The sleeves were puffed, and altogether the dress was very nice, and she said that she had the newspaper woman look very nice, and even if the double-peaked cap was of a light color, and topped out in conspicuous fashion the white service cap, and the blue and white came the impatient reminder to the puzzled inspector.

"What are you going past Egypt, and if some one of his descendants don't take it for their sire Joseph's coat of many colors, then—"
