Our little village was thrown into great commotion last week, by the report that orders had been received from Government, by the Select men of the town, to draft nine men.

No one seemed to know exactly, what dangers lay hidden deep within the meaning of that little word, but many a mothers heart grew sick, and many a sisters cheek turned pale, when it was spoken, and visions of the camp, and long forced marches, doubtless rose before their excited minds, as they thought that their sons or brothers might be among those fated ones who must exchange their quiet homes for "the terrors of war, and the battle's confusion" This was the first impression, but upon investigating the ~~matter~~ case more thoroughly, it was found to be, not quite so disheartening as we were at first
